Temperature Effects on Zenaji Batteries and Warranties

Temperature affects the performance and longevity of a battery's usable life and Zenaji LTO batteries are no different.

It is important that you maintain your battery at normal room temperatures (22 degrees) or slightly below or the lifetime and cycle warranty will degrade and decline as per the below figures.

In any event the minimum warranty which will apply to a battery operating outside the normal operating temperature range will be 10 years

Temperature effects on cycles and length of time warranted.

- -40 to -10 degrees Celsius. Cycles warranted decline from 22,000 by 10 cycles per day that the batteries are used at these temperatures. The warranty on time is also reduced by 10 days for each day the batteries are cycled at these temperatures.
- -10 to +5 degrees Celsius. Cycles warranted decline from 22000 by 5 cycles each day the batteries are used at these temperatures. The warranty on time is also reduced by 5 days for each day the batteries are cycled at these temperatures.
- +5 to +35 degrees Celsius. Cycles are warranted at 22000 cycles and 20 years.
- +35 to +45 degrees Celsius. Cycles are warranted to decline from 22000 cycles by 5 cycles each day the batteries are used at these temperatures. The warranty on time is also reduced by 5 days for each day the batteries are cycled at these temperatures.
- +45 to + 60 degrees Celsius. Cycles are warranted to decline from 22000 cycles by 10 cycles each day the batteries are used at these temperatures. The warranty on time is also reduced by 10 days for each day the batteries are cycled at these temperatures.

The capacity of the battery will also decrease with colder temperatures and the battery is not warranted to continue to have the same energy availability at temperatures below 5 degrees as it has at temperatures above this. Conversely the capacity of your batteries is likely to increase slightly with temperature above 25 degrees but the lifespan, and therefore the warranted life of your battery, will decline.

For all batteries located outside building or located where there is no heating or cooling of the room during battery use, the Local Bureau of Meteorology or State or Federal authority equivalent minimum and maximum temperature for each day will be assumed to operate for the entire day, and these figures will be used to determine warranty claims. For batteries located inside buildings and where human's habitat on a regular basis it will be assumed that the temperature of these batteries was maintained at a habitable room temperature unless there is information to the contrary. For the purposes of this warranty garages and like constructions are considered as outside rooms unless maintained as habitable temperature rooms.

Please contact Zenaji for more information regarding temperature effects on your battery.

The Battery Management System inside the battery does not collect daily temperatures information either inside or outside the battery and hence the use of Bureau of Meteorology recorded temperatures.
